RESEARCH INTERESTS

My research interests are in the broad area of computer networking and security with an emphasis on network measurement. I am particularly interested in designing new tools and techniques that push the boundaries of what we can learn from measurements. I apply these techniques to study routing security, Web privacy, online information controls (e.g., censorship) and circumvention technologies.

RESEARCH CONTRIBUTION SUMMARY

Since my first research assistantship in 2005, I have published a total of 33 conference papers (20 since completing my PhD), 5 workshop papers (3 since completing my PhD), 11 journal papers (5 since completing my PhD) and 5 posters (all since my PhD). My work has been cited a total of 3,329 times with an h-index of 21 (according to Google Scholar as of August 2017). The following section enumerates these papers along with citation counts for those with more than 50 citations.

Real world impact. Our 2007 IMC paper that characterized YouTube usage on our university campus, informed the design of SPECWeb2009¹, an industry standard benchmarking tool. More recently, my work on BGPsec deployment (published in SIGCOMM 2011) spurred the creation of a working group in the FCC². My ongoing work on Internet censorship is informed by interactions with political scientists and civil society organizations. My measurements have provided solid empirical data that has been the basis for white papers and write ups by these groups, highlighting issues related to human rights and online information controls (see press coverage below). More recently, our work on measuring traffic differentiation in mobile networks (IMC 15, 16 and 17) has been used to inform discussions in the FCC about network neutrality³
